Summary

The 21st century demands more than just subject knowledge — learners need a set of future skills to thrive in an ever-changing, technology-driven, and interconnected world. These skills — often called “soft” or “essential” — include creativity, critical thinking, digital literacy, collaboration, and resilience

This course equips educators and trainers with strategies to help learners develop these vital skills. Participants will explore what future skills are, why they matter, and how to integrate them into teaching and learning to prepare students for the challenges and opportunities ahead
