

Compensation & Benefits Strategising

Duration: 5 Days

Language: en

Course Code: PH1-122

Objective

Upon completion of this course, participants will be able to:

- Outline the fundamental principles and key components of compensation.
- Use different processes in compensation, including job analysis, job descriptions, and job evaluation.
- Define the elements contributing to a robust and efficient compensation and benefits program.
 - Develop a salary structure along with associated policies.
- Detail the essential steps involved in the compensation survey process.

Audience

This course is designed for anyone responsible for designing compensation or benefits packages to attract and retain high-quality employees. It would be most beneficial for:

- Business Owners
 - Directors
- HR Professionals
- HR Business Partners
- Payroll Personnel

- Administration Personnel
 - Recruitment Personnel
 - Marketing Managers
- Business Account Managers

Training Methodology

This course uses a variety of adult learning styles to aid full understanding and comprehension. Participants will review real-world benefits and compensation strategies and look at the data surrounding their successes.

They will participate in group discussions to understand what has worked best regarding benefits within various organisations and examine the future of benefits packages based on societal change. They will then construct their own tailored benefits package to pitch, to reduce employee attrition and improve the company's reputation.

Summary

Competitive benefits and compensation packages play a pivotal role in shaping the success and sustainability of businesses by significantly influencing employee retention and company reputation. Attracting and retaining top talent is a constant challenge in today's competitive job market. Offering competitive salaries, comprehensive health benefits, retirement plans, and other perks entices skilled professionals to join a company and motivates them to stay for the long term.

When employees feel valued and fairly compensated, they are more likely to remain committed and engaged, contributing positively to productivity and overall organisational success.

An attractive benefits and compensation package also contributes to building a positive company reputation. Word-of-mouth is a powerful force, and satisfied employees become brand ambassadors, sharing their positive experiences with potential hires and clients.

A reputation for offering excellent benefits and fair compensation enhances an employer's brand image, making it an employer of choice in the eyes of prospective employees. This positive perception not only aids in attracting top talent but also fosters a sense of pride and loyalty among existing staff.
